Staying nimble as energy policy pivots

- With global energy demand surging, many governments are recalibrating their energy policies and making waves in markets – but changes vary by region.
- U.S. stocks fell last week over higher bond yields and threats of new U.S. tariffs. We focus on actions over words as economic constraints spur policy rollbacks.
- U.S. PCE inflation this week is unlikely to reflect the full tariff impact, similar to the April CPI. But we see tariffs and a tight labor market keeping inflation sticky.

Proposed revisions to the U.S. Inflation Reduction Act are the latest in a wave of global policy changes as governments balance energy security, reliability and affordability with environmental objectives. That task is now trickier as mega forces – like power-hungry AI and geopolitical fragmentation – and electrification in some markets drive up energy demand. We see recent policy pivots causing volatility and unlocking regional opportunities, requiring investors to stay nimble.

Beaten up renewables

U.S. energy equity performance, 2019–2025

In the U.S., policymakers want to amp up domestic energy production to power AI and promote national security, but are also looking for sources of tax revenue to fund tax extensions elsewhere. We see clean energy caught in the crosshairs of that balancing act. The latest revision of the House bill, now sent to the Senate, phases out clean energy tax credits in the Inflation Reduction Act sooner. Yet the U.S. likely needs more of all kinds of energy to meet AI's needs. Industry projections see U.S. data center electricity consumption rising between 50% and 200% by 2030 – a big jump after 15 years of flat national power demand. Where does this leave clean energy stocks? They had been slumping ever since a 2021 surge. See left chart. But since April, they have been eclipsing traditional energy on hopes of limited legislative changes. See right chart. Should investors dip their toe back in now?

In the near term, we think energy and trade policy volatility presents opportunities for stock pickers and we're watching for fresh policy revisions as the legislation heads to the Senate. Longer term, we see clean energy stocks positioned for strong growth. Renewables are quick to build and valuations are attractive: the factors that contributed to their slump – like high rates and tariffs – are now priced in, we think. AI and national security goals are likely to keep driving demand for all types of power, including nuclear. Last week, President Trump signed executive orders aimed at expediting nuclear power reactor deployment, and the most recent revisions to the House bill preserved the existing tax credits allotted to nuclear project developers. But given how long it takes to build nuclear power plants, we see natural gas and renewables benefiting sooner.

Nuclear was the topic of another recent about-face in public policy elsewhere. Last week, Germany ended its longstanding aversion to nuclear power, affirming it as a low-carbon source promoting EU energy independence and affordability. Most EU nations are now supportive – a potential boon for its competitiveness, long hampered by higher energy prices. We see opportunities in the electrical equipment chain, grid infrastructure and nuclear power generation. Yet we watch for hurdles. Europe lacks recent experience in nuclear projects – and the few that have happened overran budgets and deadlines.

Policy shifts are also afoot in traditional energy. OPEC+ – a group of petroleum-producing countries – has historically sought higher oil prices to fund government projects. Yet even as prices have fallen, hitting a four-year low in April, OPEC+ has kept boosting supply. Prices jumped last week on reports that Israel might strike Iran's nuclear facilities. But if prices stay low – and OPEC+ keeps upping production – this would mark yet another sea change. It may signal OPEC+'s efforts to reclaim market share from U.S. shale oil producers. It could slow adoption of electric vehicles, as lower oil prices make clean tech less attractive. It could also confront the U.S. with another balancing act: cheap oil means consumers pay less at the pump, but too-low prices jeopardize U.S. oil. We monitor the June 1 OPEC+ meeting for signs the change will persist.

Bottom line: Growing power demand has policymakers rethinking the trade-offs between energy sustainability, affordability and security. We see opportunities in nuclear, U.S. natural gas and renewables (especially solar and batteries).

Market backdrop

The S&P 500 fell about 2% last week as worries about new fiscal pressures are pushing up U.S. Treasury yields. The slide was exacerbated after President Trump threatened to levy a 50% tariff on EU imports and a 25% tariff on Apple iPhones not made in the U.S. Yet we focus on actions over words as we've seen how economic constraints can spur policy rollbacks. U.S. 10-year Treasury yields ended the week at 4.51%, rising for a fourth week in a row. Japanese bond yields surged.

Week ahead

May 27

U.S. consumer confidence

May 31

China manufacturing PMI

May 30

U.S. PCE

This week, the focus shifts to U.S. April PCE, the Federal Reserve's preferred inflation gauge. Soft CPI and producer price data point to easing inflation pressures. But it's too soon to see the full effect of tariff hikes, and we see a tight labor market keeping wage pressures sticky – both leading to stubbornly high inflation. That likely limits how much the Fed can cut interest rates this year. Markets are pricing in two to three 25-basis point rate cuts by year end.

Big calls

Our highest conviction views on six- to 12-month (tactical) and over five-year (strategic) horizons, May 2025

Tactical	Reasons
U.S. equities	Policy uncertainty and supply disruptions are weighing on near-term growth, raising the risk of a contraction. Yet we think U.S. equities will regain global leadership as the AI theme keeps providing near-term earnings support and could drive productivity in the long term.
Japanese equities	We are overweight. Ongoing shareholder-friendly corporate reforms remain a positive. We prefer unhedged exposures given the yen's potential strength during bouts of market stress.
Selective in fixed income	Persistent deficits and sticky inflation in the U.S. make us underweight long-term U.S. Treasuries. We also prefer European credit – both investment grade and high yield – over the U.S. on more attractive spreads.
Strategic	Reasons
Infrastructure equity and private credit	We see opportunities in infrastructure equity due to attractive relative valuations and mega forces. We think private credit will earn lending share as banks retreat – and at attractive returns.
Fixed income granularity	We prefer short-term inflation-linked bonds over nominal developed market (DM) government bonds, as U.S. tariffs could push up inflation. Within DM government bonds, we favor UK gilts over other regions.
Equity granularity	We favor emerging over developed markets yet get selective in both. Emerging markets (EM) at the cross current of mega forces – like India – offer opportunities. In DM, we like Japan as the return of inflation and corporate reforms brighten the outlook.

Tracking five mega forces

Mega forces are big, structural changes that affect investing now – and far in the future. As key drivers of the new regime of greater macroeconomic and market volatility, they change the long-term growth and inflation outlook and are poised to create big shifts in profitability across economies and sectors. This creates major opportunities – and risks – for investors. See our web hub for our research and related content on each mega force.

- 1. Demographic divergence: The world is split between aging advanced economies and younger emerging markets – with different implications.
- 2. Digital disruption and artificial intelligence (AI): Technologies are transforming how we live and work.
- 3. Geopolitical fragmentation and economic competition: Globalization is being rewired as the world splits into competing blocs.
- 4. Future of finance: A fast-evolving financial architecture is changing how households and companies use cash, borrow, transact and seek returns.
- 5. Transition to a low-carbon economy: The transition is set to spur a massive capital reallocation as energy systems are rewired.

Six- to 12-month tactical views on selected assets vs. broad global asset classes by level of conviction, May 2025

We have lengthened our tactical investment horizon back to six to 12 months. The table below reflects this and, importantly, leaves aside the opportunity for alpha, or the potential to generate above-benchmark returns – especially at a time of heightened volatility.
